Abba Ahimeir (1897-1962) was a leading intellectual, activist, and politician in the early Zionist movement. He was a close associate of Ze'ev Jabotinsky, the founder of Revisionist Zionism, and served as the editor of the movement's journal, "Hazit Ha'am." Ahimeir's writings and speeches had a profound impact on the development of Zionist thought, and he is considered one of the most important ideologues of the movement.

This book is the first comprehensive study of Ahimeir's life and ideology. The author draws on a wide range of sources, including Ahimeir's own writings, archival materials, and interviews with his contemporaries. The book provides a detailed account of Ahimeir's early life, his political development, and his role in the Zionist movement.

The author argues that Ahimeir was a complex and contradictory figure. He was a brilliant intellectual who made significant contributions to Zionist thought. However, he was also a man of violence who advocated for the use of force to achieve Zionist goals. Ahimeir's legacy is still debated today, but there is no doubt that he was one of the most important figures in the early Zionist movement.

This book is essential reading for anyone interested in the history of Zionism and the development of Israeli society. It is a major contribution to the field of Israeli studies and will be of interest to scholars, students, and general readers alike.
