The Gathering Storm: World War II and the Internment of Japanese Americans

The outbreak of World War II cast a dark shadow over Japanese Americans. Following the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941, fear and paranoia gripped the nation, and the U.S. government authorized the forced removal and internment of over 120,000 Japanese Americans, two-thirds of whom were American citizens.

Uprooted from their homes and businesses, Japanese Americans were herded into desolate camps scattered across the country. They endured unimaginable hardships, living in cramped and unsanitary conditions, stripped of their dignity and basic rights.

Despite the trauma they endured, Japanese Americans exhibited extraordinary resilience and determination. They established schools and community organizations within the camps, maintaining a sense of normalcy and preserving their cultural heritage.
