Freddie Bennett, the beloved caddy master of Augusta National Golf Club for over 50 years, was a man of extraordinary character and wisdom. His unwavering dedication to the game of golf, his kindness, and his unwavering spirit inspired generations of players and caddies alike.

Born into poverty in 1924, Bennett began his life in a small town in Georgia. As a young boy, he often caddied at the local golf course, where he first developed his love for the game. After serving in the military during World War II, Bennett returned home and began working as a caddy at Augusta National in 1948.

Bennett quickly rose through the ranks, becoming the club's assistant caddy master in 1968 and then caddy master in 1978. In this role, he was responsible for overseeing the caddy corps, managing the flow of the game, and ensuring that every player and caddy had a memorable experience.

Throughout his career, Bennett became known for his exceptional knowledge of the game, his ability to connect with people, and his commitment to excellence. He was a mentor to countless caddies, sharing his wisdom and helping them to develop their skills both on and off the course.

But Bennett's legacy extends far beyond the golf course. He was a tireless advocate for diversity and inclusion in the sport, and he played a key role in breaking down racial barriers at Augusta National. In 1983, he became the first African American to receive the Masters Tournament's Lifetime Achievement Award.

In 2016, Bennett passed away at the age of 92. But his spirit continues to live on through the countless lives he touched. His teachings have inspired a new generation of golfers and caddies, and his legacy as a true legend of the game will never be forgotten.
