- Play at a high level: Strive to make an impact on your high school team and demonstrate your skills in various aspects of the game, including passing, running, blocking, and tackling.
- Attend elite camps and showcases: These events provide opportunities for you to showcase your talent in front of college coaches and recruiters.
- Get film of your games and practices: High-quality film is essential for coaches to evaluate your abilities and potential.
- Develop a highlight reel: Create a concise and engaging video that highlights your best plays and skills.

2. Build Your Academic Profile

While athletic ability is paramount, academic success is equally important in the recruiting process. College coaches prioritize student-athletes who excel both on and off the field. As a 10th grader, focus on:

- Maintain a high GPA: Aim for an overall GPA of 3.0 or higher to demonstrate your academic capabilities.
- Take rigorous courses: Challenge yourself with honors, AP, or IB classes to show colleges that you're prepared for the rigors of higher education.
- Standardized testing: Prepare for the SAT or ACT and strive for competitive scores. These tests are used by colleges to assess your academic aptitude.
- Build a strong character: Demonstrate good leadership skills, sportsmanship, and a positive attitude, both on and off the field.

3. Create a Recruiting Profile

In today's digital age, a strong online presence is crucial for student-athletes seeking scholarships. As a 10th grader, create a recruiting profile on platforms like NCSA, Rivals, and 247Sports. These profiles allow you to:

- Showcase your athletic and academic achievements: Include your stats, film, and academic information.
- Connect with college coaches: Search for and interact with coaches from schools that interest you.
- Receive scholarship offers: Colleges can send you offers through these platforms, making it easier to evaluate and compare your options.
- Build relationships with coaches: Use these platforms to initiate conversations with coaches and express your interest in their programs.

4. Attend College Visits and Camps

Attending college visits and camps is a great way to get on the radar of coaches and learn more about potential schools. As a 10th grader, take advantage of opportunities to:

- Attend junior days: These events are hosted by colleges for prospective student-athletes to tour the campus, meet the coaches, and get a taste of college life.
- Visit schools during off-season: Contact coaches and inquire about opportunities to visit the campus and meet with them individually.

- Participate in summer camps: Attend camps hosted by colleges to showcase your skills and learn from experienced coaches.

5. Seek Guidance from Mentors

Navigating the recruiting process can be complex. Seek guidance from experienced mentors who can provide support and advice. Consider connecting with:

- High school coaches: Your coaches have valuable insights into the recruiting process and can help you prepare for it.
- Private trainers: Trainers can help you improve your skills and develop a training plan that complements your recruiting goals.
- Recruiting services: These organizations provide personalized guidance, exposure to coaches, and assistance with the scholarship application process.
- Family and friends: They can offer emotional support and encouragement throughout the recruiting journey.

As a 10th grader, taking the necessary steps to prepare for football recruiting is crucial. By following the strategies outlined in this guide, you can maximize your chances of earning a scholarship to play at the college level. Remember, the recruiting process is a competitive one, but with hard work, determination, and a strategic approach, you can achieve your dream of playing college football.

To further enhance your preparation, consider investing in the book "What 10th Graders Need To Do Get Recruited For Football Scholarship Football."
